

JACK BURGESS

Born and raised on Cape Cod, Jack's service journey began with an organization called Project 351. He was selected to represent his town in 2017 for this youth community service and leadership development non-profit based in Boston. This experience ignited a long-fostered passion for service inspired by his mother, an environmental remediation consultant, and key figures and factors that exposed him to the world growing up. Since joining Project 351, Jack has led multiple annual service projects to help his local community, helped orchestrate large campaigns to raise money for Massachusetts nonprofits, and educated students on how to intervene in instances of bias or discrimination. Equipped with service and civic action skills, Jack is now a third-year at the University of Pennsylvania where he studies International Relations, Modern Middle Eastern Studies, and American Public Policy. He has interested in international development, tech, agriculture, development finance, research, and politics. In his free time, he enjoyed running, music, and coffee (he is a barista!). Jack is honored and excited to continue the Ripples of Hope Fellowship in 2023!
